That was like my father's house. I was involved in household works such as cooking, cleaning, taking care of poultry and cattle. I still do the same. I manage daylong domestic labour (ghorer kaj) to support my family. I remember my parents and grandparents also carrying out such tradition. I do the same, so will my daughter.

My husband is involved in fishing business, farming and outside works. He mainly does the income related works.

My husband. He is very dominant person for our family. We never do anything without his consent. He believes that he always takes proper decision for our betterment. I think by tradition men have this authority to rule family. I saw my father was same type at my parents' household. Now my brother took charge of their family. When my son will grow adult they will take charge of our family. Men earns and work outside. They are authoritative in character.

It doesn't look good if women involve in trading. We were not nurtured this way. Village women do not participate in market activities. Market is men's space, they do trading there. I may visit market to buy necessary items, however that must be with my husband or other women. I never dare to visit market alone. My husband will get angry.

My husband use the money, he invested the loan money. Therefore, I do not need to handle trading or any market activities.

simply do not like women to deal market or work for money. This is not their responsibility. Men must earn and women must take care of household responsibilities.

I remember, once we had to go through very tough time. We had lack of money and food. My wife proposed me if she would start doing small scale business/work or not? I forbidden her to think about this anymore. I told her that “you need not to go outside of home or think about income as long as I am alive.”

I take my household-decisions. I am the breadwinner for my family. Moreover, I move to too many places and meet many people. The purpose is to meet people and know what is going on around. I assume these communications make me more qualified than other members of my family. As a result, my decision goes wise for my family. I never see any woman in our community, having these qualifications to decide wisely for her family. They stay at home and manage domestic duties (ghorer kaj). They know nothing about the contemporary world, not even what is going on in our nearest sub-district (upazilla). I believe men are with responsibilities, and they are a better person to lead their household.

It is difficult for me to do any major work for myself (i.e. investments, household construction, repairing, purchasing costly product) if the amount is huge. Therefore, I asked my wife to take loan and fulfil our need and then we can repay the money in instalments. Such as you see that water pump (indicating finger to the water pump), I purchase this from loan money and still repaying in instalments. My wife's loan proved handy for our household and family. I used many of the loan to repair our house and then paid in instalments.
